Achievements

Three South African typical farms namely a 230 cow mixed farm, a 520 cow grazing farm and a 630 cow intensive total mixed ration farm were included in the farm comparison. These three farms cover an estimated 80% of milk produced in South Africa and are thus typical of the South African primary sector.

The IFCN mission is to create a better understanding of milk production worldwide. Scientists from 95 countries cooperated in the work of IFCN in 2013. It analysed the production and cost of 178 typical dairy farms in 57 countries and published the results in the 2013 Report. Copies of the report was supplied to Milk SA and other interested parties. The report on the competitiveness of South African dairy farms was supplied to Milk SA in February 2014. The report concluded that South African dairy farms are larger than farms in many other countries. Milk yield and cost of production is comparable to dairy farms in developed countries. However production cost is higher than in South America and New Zealand. Argentinian dairy farmers pay less for grain as there is an export tariff on grain while South African farmers buy grain at import parity prices. Both the large TMR and large pasture farm in South Africa can compete with similar farms in other countries. Report appended.
